Safe AND SOUND!

"YOU POOR, OLD, hungry cat!" Bertie Beaver said sympathetically. "Don't worry, I'll give you a home! You move right in here and you'll get lots to eat and a place to sleep and..."

"That cat!" Bertie's brother, Baxter, was horrified. "Why, he's nothing but a nasty stray cat! Don't take him in, Bertie! Everybody knows cats are treacherous! They'll turn on you, they will, just like wild animals. Don't trust him! Besides, I don't want him around Cheepie!"

Cheepie was Baxter's pet canary, a plump yellow bird with a lovely voice, who was so tame that she was permitted to fly around the house, wherever she pleased. She settled on Baxter's shoulder as he spoke and carolled out a sweet melody.

Bertie looked at Cheepie and then at the rough-and-tough cat, who mewed pitifully and rubbed up against his leg, as though pleading for a chance. His heart melted at the thought of putting the cat out into the cruel, cold street from which he had wandered.

"I'm gonna keep him!" he decided, despite the dire warnings of his brother. "C'mon, Tramp, I'll give you some nice warm milk!"

Obediently, the stray cat followed Bertie into the kitchen and waited patiently while the milk was warming on the stove. Then he lapped it up gratefully, cleaned his fur thoroughly, curled up on the floor and went to sleep.

Still looking doubtful, Baxter came into the kitchen with Cheepie on his shoulder. "I don't like it, I tell you!" he said, shaking a finger at Bertie. "Cats are mean, you can believe me! He'll be your friend for just as long as it suits him and then...trouble!"

Bertie Beaver looked at the sleeping cat and smiled. "No such thing!" he defended the newcomer stoutly. "I think we ought to give him a chance to prove..."

As he was talking, the sleeping cat opened first one great yellow eye and then the other. All the hair on his spine rose suddenly in the most terrifying manner. Opening his mouth wide to show all of his pointed teeth, he uttered a sharp, hoarse cry and then...he sprang! From the floor to the table, from the table to Baxter's shoulder, and before anyone could do anything, the cat had the plump little canary in his mouth!

"Oh, my Cheepie! My poor, weak, frightened Cheepie!" Baxter Beaver wailed, wringing his hands. "I told you that cat was no good! Bertie, don't stand there...do something! You talk to him and try to get closer, while I get the broom. Then you grab him and I'll hit him a hard whack and knock him out! We've got to rescue my little canary! Bertie, why don't you say something?"

"I don't have to!" Bertie Beaver smiled. "Here's something that speaks for itself. Look!"

Baxter gasped as he saw what Bertie was pointing at. Through the kitchen door had prowled a lean, hungry alley cat, its back arched to fight, its fangs ready for easy prey. But as it saw Tramp's arched back, and heard Tramp's low growls, the intruder began to back up, until he was out of the kitchen and out of the house!

Then Bertie's cat sprang to the table again, and up to Baxter's shoulder, where he deposited the little canary, who trilled a melodious thank-you.

"Well?" Bertie demanded, stroking Tramp, who purred happily.

"He was defending Cheepie!" Baxter cried. "Let's give him more milk!"

The THIN AIR ROBBERY

REMEMBER TO WALK carefully, now!" Mrs. Piggleton warned her family as they approached their house. "Things may not be quite dry, you know!"

By "things", Mrs. Piggleton meant the floor of the house, which had been freshly painted that very day. Indeed, it was for that reason that she and Mr. Piggleton and their plump son, Herman, had spent all day visiting friends and neighbors, for it would have been a shame to spoil all that smooth, gleaming paint.

Mrs. Piggleton smiled as they entered the house, for she was a tidy housekeeper and liked to see things looking neat and clean. But the smile faded from her face as she looked about her.

"Oh!" she exclaimed. Then she moaned, "Nooooo!" Then she fainted dead away!

"Mamma, what is it?" Herman demanded, bringing a glass of water to help revive her. "Yes, Helen, do tell us!" urged Mr. Piggleton, waving some smelling salts under her nose.

"I shall positively faint again!" Mrs. Piggleton announced, sitting up and pointing dramatically at the room, "Can't you see, we've been robbed!"

Sure enough, drawers were open and boxes had their lids off, and pillows had the stuffing taken out of them and scattered about the floor. Mrs. Piggleton looked wildly through all the drawers and then shrieked, "It's gone! My necklace with the real diamonds in it! Call the police! Call everyone! Oh, dear, oh, dear!" And true to her word, she fainted again.

By the time the police arrived, she was able to sit up and urge them, "Please, please find the criminal! My lovely necklace! You must find him!"

But the police all shook their heads gravely and the Captain said, "We're very sorry, madam, but we have absolutely no clues! There is not a single fingerprint or footprint to be found!"

"But that's impossible!" Mr. Piggleton objected.

"Sorry, sir, but it's the truth!" the Captain insisted.

All this while, little Herman Piggleton had been listening and watching very intently. As soon as he heard the Captain's words, he quietly climbed up to the window sill and reaching out, took hold of a low branch which grew on a tree right outside the window. Higher and higher he climbed, looking at every twig and branch until...

"Got you!" he shouted happily. Then, with a broad smile on his face, he climbed down the tree and into the house.

"Look!" he said. He had to say it several times before anyone noticed him, for Mrs. Piggleton was fainting again, Mr. Piggleton was storming angrily and the police were trying to explain things.

"Look!" Herman shouted, until they all turned to see what he wanted.

"Why, the lad's got a bird's nest!" his father said.

"Yes, and see here," Herman smiled. From the nest he drew forth some pillow stuffing, a lace handkerchief with the initial "P" on it (for Piggleton) and...the necklace with real diamonds in it!

"You said the crook hadn't any fingerprints or footprints," Herman explained to the Captain. "Well, birds can take things with their beaks instead o' using fingers, an' they can fly instead o' walkin'! So I thought of the magpie who lives in the tree nearby!"

"My boy," said the Captain, "any time you want a job on the police force...come to me!"
